British artist Tim's incredibly expressive abstract works evoke the dreamy nostalgic spirit of travel. One cannot quite place the works as he draws from a multitude of influences ranging from Klee and Kandinsky to Peter Lanyon and William Scott. His spirited abstractions are made methodically and defined by a vocabulary of connected forms and balance of colour and space. He is particularly interested in the immediate experience of painting as a process and reflects on its function and history of abstraction in its varied contexts, from the museum to the studio to the home. The painting process becomes almost a meditation on itself.
